Como utilizar este material

Este livro foi concebido para estudo ativo. Em cada história, começa pela preparação, lê sem traduzir palavra por palavra, identifica a ideia principal, consulta o vocabulário, volta ao texto e responde às perguntas. Depois, usa a história para falar e escrever.

1. Before reading: observa o título e prevê o tema.
2. First reading: lê sem dicionário e procura a ideia principal.
3. Second reading: consulta o vocabulário e identifica detalhes.
4. Listening: usa a leitura em voz alta do telefone ou computador, se disponível.
5. Shadowing: escolhe 5 frases e repete copiando ritmo e pausas.
6. Speaking: realiza a missão oral sem ler.
7. Writing: escreve a tarefa e revê os erros.
8. Review: regressa à história após 1, 3, 7 e 14 dias.

Story 1 | Level A1

My First English Class

Focus: Study and confidence Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for study and confidence. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Bedi arrives at an evening English class ten minutes early. He carries a notebook, a blue pen, and a small dictionary. There are twelve students in the room. The teacher writes three questions on the board: What is your name? Where are you from? Why are you learning English? Bedi understands the first two questions, but the third question is new to him. He listens carefully while another student answers. Then he writes a short answer in his notebook.

When it is his turn, Bedi stands up and says, 'Hello. My name is Bedi. I am from Angola, and I live in Luanda. I work in Human Resources. I am learning English because I want to communicate with confidence at work.' He speaks slowly and makes one small mistake. The teacher corrects the mistake and asks him to repeat the sentence. This time, the sentence is correct.

After class, Bedi talks to a classmate called Paulo. They agree to practise together for fifteen minutes before every lesson. On the way home, Bedi records a one-minute introduction on his phone. He listens to it twice and writes two words that he wants to pronounce better. The first class is not perfect, but it is a strong beginning.

3. Grammar Focus

The verb to be for identity and origin: I am, you are, he/she is.

4. Vocabulary in Context

Word / expression	Meaning in context	Example
arrive	chegar	Bedi arrives at an evening English class ten minutes early.

5. Reading Comprehension

1. What is the main situation in “My First English Class”?
2. Who is involved, and where does the story happen?
3. What specific objective does the main person have?
4. What difficulty, misunderstanding, or change occurs?
5. What action solves or improves the situation?
6. Which detail is most important to the final result?
7. Choose two expressions from the story and explain them in context.
8. Retell the events in the correct order using three sequence words.

6. Shadowing Practice

1. Bedi arrives at an evening English class ten minutes early.
2. He carries a notebook, a blue pen, and a small dictionary.
3. There are twelve students in the room.
4. The teacher writes three questions on the board: What is your name?
5. Where are you from?
6. Why are you learning English?

Method: listen slowly, repeat after the model, speak with the model, then record the six sentences without reading.

7. Speaking Mission

Speak for one to two minutes. Summarise the story, explain the main challenge, and connect the situation to your own life, work, or study experience.

8. Writing Mission

Write 70-100 words. First summarise the story. Then write a message, report, or personal reflection connected to the situation. Use at least two linking words.

9. Answer Guide

Answers must use evidence from the story. A strong answer identifies the situation, names the people and place, explains the difficulty, describes the action taken, and states the final result. Vocabulary answers may vary if the meaning is supported by context. The retelling must preserve the real sequence of events.

Story 2 | Level A1

The Registration Form

Focus: Personal details Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for personal details. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

At the entrance to a professional event, Sofia gives Bedi a registration form. The form asks for his full name, nationality, city, occupation, telephone number, and email address. Bedi knows most of the words, but he is not sure about 'occupation'. Sofia explains that occupation means job. Bedi writes Training Technician in the box.

Sofia checks the form and asks, 'How do you spell your surname?' Bedi spells it slowly. Then she asks for his phone number. Bedi says each number clearly and pauses after every group of three digits. Sofia reads the number back to him. One digit is wrong, so Bedi politely corrects it.

Before he signs the form, Bedi checks every line. His name, city, and email address are correct. He learns that personal information must be clear and accurate. He also learns two useful phrases: Could you repeat that, please? and Let me correct the number. At the end, Sofia gives him a name badge and tells him where the first session is.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the verb to be for nationality and occupation; use do in Where do you live?

4. Vocabulary in Context

Story 3 | Level A1

A Name on the Telephone

Focus: Alphabet and spelling Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for alphabet and spelling. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Marta works at a reception desk. A visitor calls to reserve a place in a training session. The telephone connection is not very clear, so Marta asks for the visitor's name twice. The visitor says, 'My first name is Grace.' Marta hears Trace.

To avoid a mistake, Marta asks, 'Could you spell your first name, please?' The visitor says, 'G-R-A-C-E.' Marta repeats the letters and confirms the name. The surname is Van Dunem. Marta has difficulty with the letters V and D, so the visitor uses simple examples: V as in video and D as in document.

Next, the visitor gives an email address. Marta writes every part carefully: grace dot vandunem at example dot com. She reads it back, and the visitor confirms it. Before the call ends, Marta spells the complete name one more time. The reservation is now correct. Marta notices that spelling is not only an alphabet exercise. It is a practical skill for telephone calls, names, email addresses, codes, and important records.

3. Grammar Focus

Use Could you spell...? and Is that B or V? to check letters.

Story 4 | Level A1

The Market Price

Focus: Numbers and prices Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for numbers and prices. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

On Saturday morning, Daniel goes to a market with twenty thousand kwanzas. He wants to buy fruit, rice, and a bottle of water. At the first stall, oranges cost two thousand five hundred kwanzas. Daniel asks the seller to repeat the price because he hears twelve thousand five hundred. The seller points to a sign and says, 'Two thousand five hundred, not twelve thousand five hundred.'

Daniel buys the oranges and continues to another stall. A five-kilogram bag of rice costs eight thousand kwanzas. There is a ten percent discount, so the final price is seven thousand two hundred kwanzas. Daniel asks how the discount works, and the seller explains the calculation slowly.

At the last stall, water costs one thousand kwanzas. Daniel pays with a twenty-thousand-kwanza note. The seller gives him the correct change and a receipt. Before leaving, Daniel checks his purchases and calculates the total. He learns to listen carefully to numbers such as thirteen and thirty, fourteen and forty, and fifteen and fifty.

3. Grammar Focus

Use How much is...? for one item and How much are...? for plural items.

4. Vocabulary in Context

Story 5 | Level A1

The Monday Meeting

Focus: Dates and time Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for dates and time. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Ana receives a message about a team meeting. The message says, 'The meeting is on Monday, 14 September, at half past nine.' Ana writes the information in her calendar, but she accidentally writes half past eight.

On Friday, a colleague asks, 'What time does the meeting start?' Ana answers, 'It starts at eight thirty.' The colleague checks the original message and shows her the correct time. Ana changes the calendar immediately. She also adds a reminder for nine o'clock.

On Monday, Ana leaves home early and arrives at the office at nine fifteen. The meeting room is on the second floor. At nine thirty, everyone is present. During the meeting, Ana learns useful time expressions: at nine o'clock, on Monday, in September, before lunch, and after work. She understands that one small mistake in the time can affect a complete schedule.

3. Grammar Focus

Use at with times, on with days and dates, and in with months and years.

Story 6 | Level A1

The Family Photograph

Focus: Family and descriptions Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for family and descriptions. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Lina brings a family photograph to class. There are seven people in the picture. Her parents are in the centre, her two brothers are behind them, and her grandmother is sitting near the window. Lina points to each person and explains the relationship.

Her older brother is tall and has short hair. Her younger brother wears glasses and likes football. Her grandmother is quiet, but she tells interesting stories. Lina has one cousin in the photograph too. The cousin lives in another province and visits the family during holidays.

The teacher asks the class to describe one person without saying the name. Lina describes a friendly person with glasses and a red shirt. The other students identify her younger brother. The activity helps Lina practise family words, possessive forms, appearance, and personality. At home, she writes labels under the photograph in English.

3. Grammar Focus

Use have/has for features and the possessive apostrophe for relationships.

4. Vocabulary in Context

Story 7 | Level A1

A Busy Morning at Work

Focus: Daily routine Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for daily routine. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

João wakes up at six o'clock and checks his plan for the day. He has breakfast, takes a bus, and arrives at work before eight. His first task is to check the training schedule. Then he answers emails and prepares an attendance list.

At ten o'clock, a trainer calls with a question about the room. João confirms the room number and sends a map. Before lunch, he prints certificates and speaks to two participants. He usually eats at one o'clock, but today he eats at one thirty because the morning is busy.

In the afternoon, João updates a report and organises files. He finishes work at five. At home, he studies English for thirty minutes. He does not study for many hours, but he practises every day. His routine shows how the present simple describes regular actions and how time expressions organise a sequence.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the present simple for routines; add -s with he, she, and it.

4. Vocabulary in Context

Word / expression	Meaning in context	Example
wake up	Consultar o contexto e inferir o sentido.	The story uses the expression “wake up” in context.
plan	Consultar o contexto e inferir o sentido.	João wakes up at six o'clock and checks his plan for the day.

Story 8 | Level A1

The New Office

Focus: Office objects and locations Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for office objects and locations. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

The Human Resources team moves to a new office. On the first morning, boxes are everywhere. There are folders under the desks, cables beside the printer, and notebooks on a shelf. Nobody can find the projector remote control.

Bedi checks the meeting room first. The projector is on the ceiling, but the remote is not on the table. He asks each colleague, 'Is the remote in your box?' One colleague remembers using it in the old office. Another colleague looks inside a grey folder and finds it between two manuals.

The team labels the shelves and drawers so that objects are easier to find. The printer paper goes in the bottom drawer, attendance lists go on the second shelf, and training materials go in a large cabinet. By the end of the morning, the office is organised. The team practises there is, there are, and prepositions of place while solving a real problem.

Method: listen slowly, repeat after the model, speak with the model, then record the six sentences without reading.

7. Speaking Mission

Speak for one to two minutes. Summarise the story, explain the main challenge, and connect the situation to your own life, work, or study experience.

8. Writing Mission

Write 70-100 words. First summarise the story. Then write a message, report, or personal reflection connected to the situation. Use at least two linking words.

9. Answer Guide

Answers must use evidence from the story. A strong answer identifies the situation, names the people and place, explains the difficulty, describes the action taken, and states the final result. Vocabulary answers may vary if the meaning is supported by context. The retelling must preserve the real sequence of events.

Story 15 | Level A1

A Plan for Next Month

Focus: Future plans Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for future plans. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Elisa wants to improve her English next month. She writes a simple plan with four weekly goals. In the first week, she is going to review personal information and daily routines. In the second week, she is going to practise shopping and travel situations.

Every morning, Elisa plans to listen for fifteen minutes. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, she is going to write a short paragraph. On Saturdays, she is going to record a two-minute speaking task. She is not going to study for three hours at once because long sessions make her tired.

Elisa shares the plan with a friend. The friend agrees to practise one dialogue with her every Sunday. At the end of the month, Elisa is going to repeat her first recording and compare the two versions. Her plan is specific, realistic, and connected to actions.

3. Grammar Focus

Use be going to for intentions and planned future actions.

Story 16 | Level A2

The Delayed Training Materials

Focus: Past actions and problem solving Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for past actions and problem solving. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

On Tuesday morning, Ana was preparing a training room when she discovered that the printed manuals had not arrived. The courier was carrying the boxes from another office, but heavy traffic delayed the delivery. Twenty-four participants were expected at nine o'clock, and the trainer wanted to begin with a practical exercise from the manual.

Ana called the courier and learned that the boxes would arrive after ten. Instead of stopping the session, she reviewed the digital files and selected the first six pages. While a colleague was printing those pages, Ana sent a short message to the trainer and proposed a different opening activity. The trainer agreed to begin with introductions and a group discussion.

The temporary copies were ready before the participants entered the room. The complete manuals arrived during the first break. After the session, Ana documented the problem and recommended sending materials one day earlier in future. The delay did not disappear, but a clear decision, good communication, and an alternative plan prevented it from controlling the whole event.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the past continuous for background actions and the past simple for events.

Story 17 | Level A2

A Difficult Online Meeting

Focus: Technology and clarification Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for technology and clarification. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

The regional team scheduled an online meeting for Wednesday afternoon. At the start, everyone could see the presentation, but several people could not hear the main speaker. The speaker continued for two minutes before noticing messages in the chat.

Bedi interrupted politely and said, 'We can see your screen, but we cannot hear you clearly.' The speaker changed the microphone setting and tested the sound. The audio improved, although there was still a short delay. To make the discussion easier, the team agreed to keep microphones muted when they were not speaking and to use the raise-hand button before contributing.

Later, the connection became unstable while Bedi was giving an update. He stopped, switched off his camera, and repeated the last point. Before the meeting ended, the chairperson summarised the decisions and sent the action list in the chat. The meeting showed that useful online communication includes checking understanding, explaining technical problems, and confirming next steps.

3. Grammar Focus

Story 18 | Level A2

The Job Interview Practice

Focus: Experience and career goals Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for experience and career goals. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Midoi had a job interview on Friday, so he asked a friend to practise with him. First, they reviewed the job description and selected examples from his previous experience. His friend advised him not to memorise long answers. Instead, he prepared short points about administration, customer service, organisation, and teamwork.

During the mock interview, the first question was, 'Can you tell me about yourself?' Midoi gave a clear answer, but he spoke too quickly. They repeated the answer with pauses. The next question asked about a difficult situation. Midoi described a day when several customers needed help at the same time. He explained how he prioritised urgent requests and communicated waiting times.

At the real interview, Midoi was still nervous, but the practice helped him organise his ideas. He asked one question about training opportunities and another about the daily responsibilities. After the interview, he wrote down the questions he remembered. Whether or not he received the offer, the experience became useful preparation for future applications.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the past simple for examples and the present perfect for general experience.

The Lost Bag at the Airport

Focus: Travel and reporting a problem Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for travel and reporting a problem. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

After a flight, Clara waited beside the baggage carousel, but her black suitcase did not appear. Other passengers collected their bags and left. Clara checked the flight number on the screen and looked around the carousel one more time.

She went to the baggage service desk and explained the problem. The agent asked for her boarding pass, baggage tag, contact number, and hotel address. Clara described the suitcase carefully: medium-sized, black, with a red ribbon on the handle. The agent entered the information into the system and gave her a reference number.

The suitcase had been sent to the wrong area during a transfer. The airline located it that evening and arranged delivery to the hotel the next morning. Clara kept the reference number and checked the status online. The experience taught her to describe an object precisely, report a sequence of events, and ask when and how a problem would be resolved.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the past perfect to show an earlier past action: The bag had been sent to the wrong area.

Story 20 | Level A2

Choosing Between Two Courses

Focus: Comparisons and decisions Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for comparisons and decisions. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Carlos wanted to improve his data skills, but he could only attend one course. The first course focused on advanced Excel and lasted six weeks. It was cheaper and closer to his office. The second course focused on Power BI, lasted eight weeks, and included a final dashboard project.

Carlos created a comparison list. The Excel course was more convenient, but he already used many Excel functions at work. The Power BI course was more expensive, yet it offered a skill that could support future career opportunities. He also compared the schedules. One course met on weekday evenings, while the other met on Saturday mornings.

After discussing the options with a colleague, Carlos selected the Power BI course. He did not choose it because it was simply 'better'. He chose it because it matched his current gap and long-term goal. His decision used comparatives, reasons, priorities, and evidence rather than a quick preference.

3. Grammar Focus

Use comparative forms and connectors such as but, while, yet, and because.

The Customer Complaint

Focus: Service and solutions Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for service and solutions. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

A customer contacted a service desk because a document contained the wrong date. The customer had already called once and was frustrated by the delay. Isabel listened without interrupting and repeated the problem to confirm that she understood it correctly.

She checked the original request and found that two different dates appeared in the system. Rather than blaming another department, Isabel explained what she could do immediately. She corrected the digital record, asked a supervisor to approve the new document, and gave the customer a realistic delivery time.

Thirty minutes later, Isabel sent the corrected document and called to confirm receipt. She also recorded the cause of the error so the team could prevent it in future. The customer thanked her for the clear update. The solution depended not only on correcting the date but also on listening, acknowledging the inconvenience, setting expectations, and following up.

3. Grammar Focus

Use present perfect with already and past simple for specific completed actions.

4. Vocabulary in Context

Write 120-160 words. First summarise the story. Then write a message, report, or personal reflection connected to the situation. Use at least four linking words.

9. Answer Guide

Answers must use evidence from the story. A strong answer identifies the situation, names the people and place, explains the difficulty, describes the action taken, and states the final result. Vocabulary answers may vary if the meaning is supported by context. The retelling must preserve the real sequence of events.

Story 22 | Level A2

The New Study Habit

Focus: Present perfect and progress Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for present perfect and progress. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

For several months, Marta tried to study English only when she had a free evening. Some weeks she studied for two hours, but other weeks she did nothing. She often forgot vocabulary because the gaps between sessions were too long.

Six weeks ago, she changed her method. She began with twenty minutes every morning: five minutes of review, five minutes of listening, five minutes of shadowing, and five minutes of writing. She has also recorded one speaking task every Sunday. The recordings are short, but they show changes that she cannot notice from day to day.

Marta has not completed her A2 goal yet, but she has already become more consistent. She now remembers more words and pauses less when she speaks about familiar topics. The most important change is not a perfect score. It is the fact that English has become a regular part of her routine.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the present perfect for progress connected to now; use ago with the past simple.

Story 23 | Level A2

A Change in the Travel Plan

Focus: Future arrangements and conditions Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for future arrangements and conditions. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

A work team planned to travel on Monday morning, but the airline changed the flight to Sunday evening. The new time created two problems: the hotel reservation started on Monday, and one team member had a family commitment on Sunday afternoon.

The coordinator contacted the hotel and asked whether the reservation could begin one day earlier. The hotel had one available room, but the second room would only be ready late in the evening. Meanwhile, the team member explained that he could travel if the departure was after seven.

The coordinator compared three options and proposed a later Sunday flight. If the airline confirmed the seats, the team would travel together and use the available room until the second room was ready. Everyone accepted the plan. The situation required future arrangements, polite negotiation, and a first conditional sentence to describe what would happen after confirmation.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the present continuous for arrangements and the first conditional for real future possibilities.

Giving Feedback to a Colleague

Focus: Workplace communication Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for workplace communication. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

During a busy week, a colleague prepared an attendance report with several missing names. The report was important because management needed the final number before approving certificates. Instead of sending a critical email, Teresa asked for a short private conversation.

She began with something positive: the report was clearly organised and easy to read. Then she described the specific problem. Five participants had signed the paper list, but their names were absent from the digital report. Teresa showed the two documents and asked how they could check the difference together.

The colleague corrected the report and suggested a checklist for future sessions. Teresa agreed and added one more control: compare the paper and digital lists before submission. The conversation stayed respectful because the feedback focused on evidence, impact, and improvement, not on the colleague's personality.

3. Grammar Focus

Use should, could, and specific evidence to give constructive feedback.

4. Vocabulary in Context

The Presentation Without Slides

Focus: Presentations and adaptation Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for presentations and adaptation. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

Paulo was about to begin a short presentation when the projector stopped working. He had prepared twelve slides, including charts, examples, and a summary. The audience was already seated, and the technical team needed at least twenty minutes to examine the equipment.

Paulo decided not to wait. He wrote the three main points on a whiteboard and used printed copies of one chart. He asked the audience a question at the beginning, explained each point with a practical example, and paused after every section. Without the slides, he made more eye contact and spoke more naturally.

The projector started working near the end, but Paulo used it only for the final summary. After the presentation, several people said that the structure had been easy to follow. The problem forced him to simplify the message and showed that slides support a presentation, but they are not the presentation itself.

3. Grammar Focus

Use sequencing language and signposting: first, next, finally, the main point is.

4. Vocabulary in Context

Story 26 | Level A2

The Hotel Room Problem

Focus: Complaints and polite negotiation Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for complaints and polite negotiation. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

When Luís entered his hotel room, he noticed that the air-conditioning was not working and that the window did not close completely. The weather was hot, and traffic noise came through the window. He called reception and explained both problems calmly.

The receptionist apologised and sent a technician. The technician repaired the window but could not fix the air-conditioning that evening. Reception offered a fan, but Luís needed a quiet and comfortable room for an early meeting. He asked whether another room was available.

The hotel moved him to a room on a higher floor and offered breakfast without charge. Luís checked the new room before moving his luggage. The conversation was successful because he described the facts, explained the impact, listened to the first offer, and requested a reasonable alternative.

3. Grammar Focus

Use polite complaint forms: There seems to be a problem with... and Could you...?

Story 27 | Level A2

An Important Deadline

Focus: Deadlines and professional updates Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for deadlines and professional updates. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

A team had to submit a training proposal by Thursday afternoon. On Wednesday, they discovered that one section still needed financial information from another department. Waiting silently could put the complete proposal at risk.

The project coordinator sent a concise message explaining which figures were missing, why they were necessary, and the exact time they were needed. The other department replied that the responsible colleague was away. However, a supervisor could provide provisional figures before midday.

The team used the provisional figures and clearly labelled them for confirmation. They completed the remaining sections and sent a draft for review. On Thursday morning, the final figures arrived and matched the provisional ones. The proposal was submitted two hours before the deadline. Clear updates, ownership, and early escalation protected the schedule.

3. Grammar Focus

Use have to, need to, and must for obligations and deadlines.

Story 28 | Level A2

The Visitor Who Spoke English

Focus: Real-time communication Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for real-time communication. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

An English-speaking visitor arrived at the office while the usual interpreter was in another meeting. Bedi welcomed the visitor and explained that the interpreter would arrive in twenty minutes. The visitor needed directions to a training room and wanted to confirm the day's schedule.

Bedi used simple sentences, showed the schedule on his screen, and checked understanding after each point. When he did not know the English word for one document, he described its purpose instead: 'This is the paper where participants write their names.' The visitor understood and supplied the word attendance sheet.

They reached the training room without difficulty. Later, Bedi wrote down the new expression and two other phrases from the conversation. The experience showed that successful communication does not require perfect vocabulary. It requires clear messages, strategies for missing words, and willingness to check meaning.

3. Grammar Focus

Use relative explanations and functional language when a word is missing.

4. Vocabulary in Context

The Decision About Training

Focus: Opinions and justification Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for opinions and justification. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

A department had funds for only one external training programme. One option focused on technical software, while the other focused on communication and leadership. Different team members supported different choices.

During the discussion, each person had to give a reason and an example. The technical group argued that new software skills would reduce manual work. The communication group explained that several recent problems had resulted from unclear responsibilities and weak follow-up.

The manager reviewed performance data and upcoming projects. The team finally selected the technical course for this quarter and planned the communication course for the next budget period. The decision did not satisfy every preference, but it connected resources, evidence, timing, and business needs. The discussion practised respectful disagreement and justified opinions.

3. Grammar Focus

Use opinion phrases and contrast: I believe, in my view, however, while, although.

Method: listen slowly, repeat after the model, speak with the model, then record the six sentences without reading.

7. Speaking Mission

Speak for two to three minutes. Summarise the story, explain the main challenge, and connect the situation to your own life, work, or study experience.

8. Writing Mission

Write 120-160 words. First summarise the story. Then write a message, report, or personal reflection connected to the situation. Use at least four linking words.

9. Answer Guide

Answers must use evidence from the story. A strong answer identifies the situation, names the people and place, explains the difficulty, describes the action taken, and states the final result. Vocabulary answers may vary if the meaning is supported by context. The retelling must preserve the real sequence of events.

A Mistake in the Report

Focus: Explaining and correcting errors Estimated study: 35-50 minutes

1. Before You Read

This story develops language for explaining and correcting errors. Before reading, predict the people, place, objective, and possible difficulty. Read once for the general meaning before checking individual words.

2. Complete Story

After sending a monthly report, Daniel noticed that the total number of participants was incorrect. One training session had been counted twice. The report had already reached three managers, so deleting the file would not solve the communication problem.

Daniel checked every line, corrected the total, and saved a new version with a clear date. He then sent a short message explaining exactly what had changed. He did not hide the mistake or write a long excuse. He stated the cause, attached the corrected report, and identified a prevention step.

The managers appreciated the quick correction. Daniel added a duplicate check to his reporting process and asked a colleague to verify the next report before submission. The incident became a lesson in accountability: recognise the error, correct the evidence, communicate clearly, and improve the process.

3. Grammar Focus

Use the past perfect for actions completed before another past moment.
